

A station purporting to report "news" is legally bound not to show partisanship in its programming. The airing of "To lost honor" by Sinclair's affiliates is a blatant partisan move intended to affect the election and is clearly illegal. If it does risk its license by showing the program before the election, perhaps the only way to redeem themselves legally and in credibility is to air a parallel anti-Bush program or a pro-Kerry program like "Going Upriver" also before the election.

Otherwise, I urge you to consider Sinclair's illegal partisan activities when deciding whether to issue a new license.

If this POW group wants to tell their questionable story they can publish a book or make a documentary, neither of which forms of media purport to serve the public's interests.
